The Sturgeon Fishery.

A writer in a recent issue of the Scientific American has considerable to say on the above subject, from which are gleaned the following facts: Sturgeon has been much neglected until recently, and its commercial importance has been much underestimated. It is really a valuable food fish, and its neglect may be accounted for in a measure by the fact that in the month of May, when sturgeon are Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, the most abundant, the market is well supplied with other and choicer varieties of fish. New York packers have met and overcome this difficulty in the following manner; the sturgeon as soon as caught and dressed is placed in a large freezer, where, by a patented method, they are frozen solid as they lie in boxes. In Salem, N. J., where this process is applied, 10,625 pounds of sturgeon can be frozen every seven hours. After freezing they are taken from the boxes and stored in large rooms, through the center of each of which a freezing apparatus extends, which is charged anew each day, enabling the keeping of fish for months until there is a demand for them. The sturgeon range from Georgia, in winter, to St. BROKER. BANKER John's, N. B., in summer. Many fishermen are constantly engaged in the industry, and large gill nets, each about 200 fathoms long, with meshes a foot in size, are used. The Delaware river is the principal fishing ground. The fish enter this river about the 22d of May, and such extreme numbers HORE that it is necessary to use nets of about 50 fathoms, larger ones being at that time unmanageable. The Gras. R. Story average catch is about 25 or 30 fish at every east. This lasts about two weeks-the fish moving steadily up the stream towards the head of the river. They make a sudden disappearance about June 10th. It is miraculous how they get out of the river without being caught. All the fishermen know about it is, that one day they are Bacon, Hams, Shoulders, Lard, busy catching fish, and on the next their nets are empty. The usual way of preparing sturgeon for market is by smoking. Strips an inch or two thick are put through a pickling process, after Best of WINES AND LEQUORS. which they are bung on hooks HOUSE, SIGN, AND CARRIAGE over a slow fire of corncobs or hardwood sawdust. After smoking for a single night they are Washington Market, and for shipment anywhere. The preparation of caviar is an important part of the business. Of this there are two kinds-the soft and the hard—the latter being Union India Rubber Co's SAINT MARY'S worth about twice as much as the former. To make the best article the roe is taken from the sturgeon Which will be sold at lowest rates, wholesale and retail. Special attention given to study as soon as possible after the fish has been caught. Before being dried it is rubbed through a coarse sieve to break the eggs apart and to free them from membranous tissue. Next it is thoroughly salted, and after standing a certain length of time it is emptied into fine sieves, where it remains until it is so dry as to roll like shot. After it is finished it is packed in casks lined with napkin linen, each layer being salted with fine table salt. The kegs hold about 150 pounds each. Properly cared for, it will keep a year or longer. It is sometimes canned like fruit, when it can be transported to
